I am adamantly opposed to the proposed DOJ settlement. I have been in the computer business since the early '60's. I watched for years as Microsoft ran business after business, out of business. Netscape, a fine browser, was one of the most visible, but by far, not the only one. Stac, a disk compression company is one that comes to mind, when Microsoft 'added' a near copy of it to Windows, in the form of 'Double disk'. The original proposed settlement, breakup of Microsoft, and a Windows product without Internet Explorer was by far the best proposal. I believe the remaining nine states, and now AOL, are absolutely right to demand a much better solution to a major monopolistic company that Microsoft is. Not to mention the arrogance of Mr. Bill Gates.
